THE GOLDEN RATIO

The Golden Ratio is a mathematical ratio found in nature, which is commonly denoted by the symbol for phi (ϕ). Two entities can be in The Golden Ratio if their ratio is equivalent to the ratio of their sum and the larger of the two entities.

THE GOLDEN RATIO

The Golden Ratio is being used in paintings and architecture for ages now. It is used to create charming compositions that replicate natural designs. The Golden Ratio makes buildings and spaces more aesthetically satisfying by giving them a more proportional look. The Golden Ratio makes things look complete as if everything was destined to be there.

Each building or construction you see seems to be different in terms of sizes, shapes, and styles. However, they are similar at the core since all the calculations are based on the natural materials. Golden Ratio determines each of its proportions. The evenly spaced columns or peaked and sloped roofs are the simplest examples of the rule since the lengths and widths of shapes correspond, to the ratio and the resulting rectangles can be further divided into smaller and smaller segments while maintaining ratio's proportion.
